

Jabra Biz 2400 USB Mono

Do I have audio and call control on my Jabra device when I use it with computer softphones on the Linux operating system?

Prerequisites

- Linux operating system

In general, Linux supports Jabra USB audio devices at the audio level only, and further integration is dependent on the softphone and its client software. This means that basic audio should be enabled, and the system solution provider is responsible for additional functionality such as call control for the connected audio device.

Selected Linux supported softphones do support call control with Jabra USB audio devices. Refer to the specifications of the Linux operating system for details about USB audio and call control support.